The importance of health protection for painters cannot be emphasised often enough. And that also includes the skin, as pollutants can also enter the body through our largest organ. The right protective clothing is therefore essential in the paint booth. If it looks good and is comfortable in addition to its function, this only increases its protective potential – as it will be worn more willingly.

The new SATA suit Standard is made from a special polyester fabric with a percentage of carbon. The material is free from paint-damaging substances, low-lint, antistatic and particularly abrasion-resistant.

The manufacturer paid particular attention to wearing comfort. Air-permeable inserts in the back, underarm and crotch area support air circulation and counteract heat build-up. The cut allows great freedom of movement without being too wide or bulky, minimising the risk of it touching painted surfaces by accident. Many adjustment options help the wearer to adjust the suit. These include a waist adjustment with an elasticated tab on the inside and an elasticated drawstring on the hood.

The suit Standard comes with numerous pockets for stowing smaller items, some of which are designed as reach-through pockets. And because appearance is also a decisive criterion for many people: The SATA suit Standard comes in cool black with red colour accents and a large SATA logo on the back.

The SATA suit Standard is available in various men's and women's sizes.
